

GODAN + PUSH

Presidents United to Solve Hunger, an initiative of the Hunger Solutions Institute, was invited in 2015 to be an early partner with GODAN and to serve on the executive planning committee of the 2016 GODAN Summit. With 85 and counting signatories to the Presidents' Commitment to Food and Nutrition Security, PUSH is leveraging its network of highly influential academic leaders to advance open data and accelerate progress toward universal food security. As discoverers, curators and disseminators of knowledge, universities can be incredible partners in GODAN's mission: to make agriculture and nutrition data available, accessible, and usable worldwide.

Why open data?

The agriculture and food sector currently suffers from information asymmetries and closed data practices that limit progress, value generation and the fair distribution of resources. Open data has already been shown in some parts of the value chain, and in other sectors, to enable impacts through: data-driven decision-making, innovation, and business creation; improved service delivery; improved and more accessible information products; and increased transparency of decision-making and accountability.
