

Summary:

The purpose of this document is to provide guidelines and conditions for using, reproducing, editing, and linking to materials created by Auburn University's Office of University Writing, the Miller Writing Center, the ePortfolio Project, and their partners.

Examples of works covered by these guidelines include, but are not limited to the following:

1. Blog posts, journal and news articles, syllabi, and handouts
2. Presentations, PowerPoints, and instructional materials
3. Videos, audio recordings and broadcasts, and scripts
4. Graphics, images, flyers, and web content

Terms of Use:

If the conditions detailed below are followed, resources and materials from Auburn University's Office of University Writing may be reproduced free of charge for educational, personal, and training purposes. They may not be reproduced for commercial use, including as part of any event, service, or product where a fee is charged and the goal is to make a profit. Individuals and organizations are expected to adhere to the following terms of use:

- Resources and materials must be reproduced in their entirety with original logos and/or attributions in place. Logos may include, but are not limited to, the official Auburn University and Office of University Writing logos, "Yeah, Write" logo, Miller Writing Center logo, and ePortfolio Project logo. Original copyright and authorship information attached to documents and other materials must remain intact.
- Resources and materials should not be modified from their original format. Information may not be copied and pasted from Office of University Writing materials or website into new documents.
- Resources and materials may not be hosted on other websites, platforms, or learning management systems; rather, individuals and organizations should link to resources and materials located on the Office of University Writing's website and social media channels.
- In accordance with the Fair Use Doctrine, individuals and organizations may use the Office of University Writing's materials to create new or derivative works. These new or derivative works must include attribution to "Office of University Writing, Auburn University."
