Platform:
To fight for the success of Auburn students is to fight to promote not just academics or social activities, but also to promote psychological and emotional well-being. Encouraging Auburn students to become more balanced individuals is to encourage emotional health.

When walking to class or participating in social clubs or events, it is very easy to believe that no one is struggling. While we have a wonderful campus that offers great experiences, we often need a reminder that as humans, we all struggle with something in life. Many of us have experienced similar struggles such as eating disorders, depression, or sexual assault, or addiction, which are not visible to our fellow classmates.

As a candidate for Miss Homecoming, I would like to promote the on-campus resources that give students practical and tangible support to help solve whatever they are battling. It will strengthen the student body to know that these struggles are not only common, but could easily be shared with those you may pass by on a day-to-day basis, from a classmate to a roommate to a professor.

I would also like to remind students that they do not have to battle with these struggles alone and to remind them that Auburn has wonderful resources such as free counseling, support groups, nutritionist, and so much more. I want to de-stigmatize emotional health by showing the student body how common these issues are in Auburn and that it is okay to reach out for help when you are struggling!

This opportunity to be a candidate for Miss Homecoming would not be possible without the support from so many, especially my Auburn family. Auburn is a campus composed of diverse people from all walks of life. With that diversity, comes a uniqueness of struggles, but more importantly, a uniqueness of gifts. Over the last three years, Auburn University has been my home and my community. The Auburn family bond is much deeper than cheering together on game days. We are a family that loves and accepts each other as unique individuals and aren’t afraid to stand by each other when life gets difficult. This bond is what makes Auburn the incredible place that it is, and I hope to strengthen that bond through the awareness my platform will bring. So support the emotional and psychological well-being of Auburn students and don’t forget Cody Nall Y’all! WAR EAGLE!!
